ORATION BY WENDELL PHILLIPS. His Objections to Imparital Suffrage-Impendiment and Removal of the President Demanded.

New York, Nov. 24 .- At a meeting of the Pennsylvania Anti-slavery Society, in Philadelphia, yesterday, Wendell Phillips delivered an oration, of which the following is an epitome:

There is a great cry of impartial suffrage. I have two objections to it. The granting of suffrage only to those blacks who read or who have property is dismiss-ing the question from our political issues. We lose that advantage and at the same time add to the Union political strength of the South only a small per centage of the negroes. If, upon granting impartial suffrage, a State resumes her sovereignty, it would be for South Carolina to say how fast her negro population shall learn to read, shall acquire property or own land. If, therefore, the Republican programme is to content itself with impartial suffrage, it ought to be accompanied by the Federal Government retaining so much control of the separate States as to insure a thorough exercise of civil rights and the education of the masses.

" As this is not likely to be permitted, it seems to me a much safer and wiser way to keep the States in their present condition, during which the Federal Government and the North have great influence on both of these issues-education and the effectual security of civil rights.

"Congress, therefore, the moment it assembles, should throw the chaff of reconstruction out of one window and these swindling amendments out of the other, and commence with the business of the hour, which is the removal of a Southern rebel from the control of the Executive Department of the Government; impeach the President, and not only impeach him, but, while under trial, let the duties of his office be performed by another hand.
"The wisdom of this course is not only to save us from danger but to let this reconstruction, by planting the seeds of the new social state at the South, commence at once, and not be delayed until the fourth of March. 1867: to let it commence while the Federal authority can watch and protect it in the present territories south of Mason and Dixon's line. The Fortieth Congress should meet on the fifth day of March, 1867, and not have its session delayed until next December. By their own showing it is not safe. The experience of the last summer shows that it is not safe to trust the President without the check of the legislative body. Consistency requires that Congress should go further, if they really distrust, as they assert they do, the intentions of the President." The address was delivered to a large cu-
